Henry James Clegg is one of the prosperous and progressive merchants of Heber. He has built up a large and increasing merchandise business on South Main street. His stock consists of family supplies such as groceries, dry goods, boots and shoes, hats and caps, underclothing, notions, etc., and he deals in all kinds of farm and dairy products. He also carries a choice line of Christmas goods for the little folks and his store has long been headquarters for holiday turkeys, chickens, squash, etc., for the housewives.

To meet the increasing demand of his business he was obliged to enlarge his store this season to double its former capacity and to increase his stock proportionately.

Mr. Clegg and his brother, began business May 17, 1901, with a small stock of goods. Later his brother drew out and he has continued with the business which has steadily increased ever since it was started. He has won the patronage and confidence of a large circle of people of which he is justly proud and is trying hard to merit a continuance of their good will. His motto is and has been to live and let live, believing that it is better to assist people to rise than to try to crowd them down.
